I believe strongly that the penalties for Microsoft's antitrust misbehavior need to be sufficient to strongly discourage such behavior in the future. Microsoft's competitors have been seriously wronged by its illegal tactics. Microsoft does not appear to believe it has done anything wrong despite rulings to the contrary and continues to act in similar anti-competitive ways.

It is important to restraint the company's behavior in order to create a competitive software environment. I hope that you will rule accordingly.

Sincerely,
James M. Worthington
